How Georgia Supports Iran's War Effort
March 25, 2026

Once a key US partner in the Caucasus, Georgia should be a prime target for US sanctions.

While the United States is engaged in a war against Iran, one of Washington's former strategic partners in the South Caucasus has become Tehran's most sophisticated sanctions-evasion hub. Georgia, a nation that once received hundreds of millions in US security assistance before a pause in 2024, now enables the regime in Tehran. Georgia's actions fundamentally undermine the strategic priorities of US Caucasus policy: containing Iran, countering Russian and Chinese influence, and maintaining stability.

Resetting the Rules of the Region: Why a Deal with Iran Is Not Enough (26/03/2026)

- Ending the war does not mean resolving its underlying causes; any unconditional or non-verifiable ceasefire risks reproducing escalation rather than containing it.
- The politicization of strategic waterways – foremost among them the Strait of Hormuz – represents the most urgent threat. These routes must be insulated from political bargaining and redefined as international utilities governed by stable, enforceable rules.
- A return to a narrow nuclear-focused approach is no longer sufficient. The current reality demands a broader security framework that addresses Iran’s missile and drone programs as well as regional conduct.
- The durability of any settlement hinges on integrating the proxy file, designing phased incentives and involving Gulf states in shaping security arrangements that reflect the region’s actual balance of power and interests.

China is mapping the ocean floor as it prepares for submarine warfare with the U.S. Dozens of Chinese research vessels are on a quest to map the sea floor at strategically vital regions of the world's oceans. Some of the surveying is for mineral deposits and fishing grounds, but the data the ships collect has a military application. It gives Beijing a detailed picture of the maritime environment in which submarine battles will be waged if conflict erupts, naval experts say.
